

Got something to say about Small Business Insurance?

We're inviting all Small Business owners and operators across South Australia to help us understand what you think and know about small business insurance.

Across August to October, social enterprise Resilient Ready are running two rounds of community and online talks to develop 10 micro-learning modules to help people in small business think differently about insurance.

At each session we'll be asking for anonymous answers about your small business insurance experiences.

- Kangaroo Island (29 Aug + 12 Oct)

All findings are anonymous with discussed topics to include:

- Types of business insurance
- Affordability
- Underinsurance
- Brokers
- Responsibilities

If you are unable to join a community or online event you can complete the Round 1 survey here.

Findings will inform micro-learning modules and a White Paper report to be shared with Government and the Insurance industry.

“Insurance is critical for every micro to small business,” said Resilient Ready CEO + Founder Renae Hanvin.

“These talks are about understanding what South Australian small business owners currently think and do when it comes to small business insurance – so we can help build that knowledge and support every small business to thrive,” said Renae.

“We know that unexpected events, emergencies and natural disasters can have devastating consequences on small businesses,” said Minister for Small and Family Business Andrea Michaels.

“That’s why the Malinauskas Government is supporting Resilient Ready to deliver these valuable sessions on the importance of business insurance to safeguard their assets, employees and overall operations.”
